Since this table was compiled I have received Mr. Bhandarkar's Report of a second tour in search of Sanskrit manuscripts made in Rājputāna and Central India in 1904-05 and 1905-06 (Bombay, 1907). According to inscriptions found by him in certain temples at Jaisalmer, Mulrāj I (No. 21) was succeeded by his brother, Ratan Singh, and they together "righteously protected the earth as did Lakshman and Rāma of old." Mulrāj had a son called Deorāj, the father of Kehar II (No. 24); one inscription mentions him as the chief of the State just after Gharsi (or Ghata Singh), but the popular idea is that he died of fever during the siege of Jaisalmer at the end of the thirteenth century.

The figures for 1891-92 and 1901-02 are not quite complete for the following reasons. Included among the vernacular schools are five in Mallāni in 1891-92 and four in 1901-02, but nothing is known regarding the number on the rolls of, or the daily average attendance at, any of these institutions in either of the above years. Similarly, the special schools were the Sanskrit school and the Powlett noble's school in 1891-92, and the Sanskrit school and the Elgin Rājput school in 1901-02, but information as to attendance, etc., is available only for the Sanskrit school. The Elgin school was amalgamated with the Darbār high school in 1903-04, leaving only one special institution (the Sanskrit school) in 1904-05, but the nobles' school was re-established in the following year. The surveying class was held at the College, and hence has not been treated as a separate school; it was abolished in 1904

For reasons given at pages 374—75 of Volume III-A this table is misleading; the number of schools has certainly increased since 1902, but not to the extent indicated. Prior to 1904, classes or sections of a school were treated as part and parcel of that school, but they have since been shown as separate institutions. For example, the high school, with its special classes for instruction in bookkeeping, banika business, the duties of a patwārī, etc., was formerly entered in the returns as one single school, but since 1904 each such class has been held to be a separate school. Similarly, many of the schools in the districts have long had both Hindī and banika classes, but the latter have for the last three years been shown as separate institutions. The schools mentioned in this table are all maintained by the Darbār; there have always been many private ones of the indigenous type, but they send in no returns.

List of schools in the Bīkaner State, 1906.

Locality.	Class.	Number on rolls.	Daily average attendance.	REMARKS.
Bhādra	Hindi primary	53	47	All these schools are maintained by the Darbār at an annual cost of about Rs. 31,000. There are in addition numerous institutions of the indigenous type, such as pāthshālas, kept up by private individuals or communities, but they are not under departmental control. A banika school, it should be explained, is one in which instruction is given in mental arithmetic and the general system of mercantile business and accounts as conducted in Mārwāri characters. It will be seen that more than half of the boys were borne on the rolls of these banika schools. The girls' school at the capital is the only one of the kind in the State.

NOTE.—The figures for the year ending 30th September 1907 have since been published. The number of schools remained unchanged, but the number of pupils on the rolls increased to 2,347 (including 250 girls), while the daily average attendance rose to 1,874 (of whom 148 were girls). The greater popularity of the girls' school is noteworthy.
